The fourth annual informal interactive dialogue (IID) between the members of the Security

2) Linkages between PBC activities work in New York and in the field

PBC's convening platform provide an opportunity to bring together all UN and other key actors, including regional and sub-regional organizations, and international financial institutions at strategic and operational levels.

PBC flexible and context-specific working methods, including the need to go beyond the structure of country-configurations, that help respond to specific needs of the countries concerned. This flexibility will also allow the PBC to continue focusing on the regional dimension of peacebuilding, building on the successful work conducted in West Africa in early 2016.

PBF is a good example of quick and catalytic funding that fosters UN system-wide coherence in support of long-term sustaining peace priorities. More predictable and sustaining funding is required to better respond to challenges related to the whole cycle of conflict, from prevention to development.

The complementarity and synergy between the PBC and the PBF are also crucial in ensuring coherence of UN sustaining peace efforts.

3) Articulation between the PBC and the Security Council

The PBC's advisory role to the Security is centred on enhancing efforts aimed at preventing lapse and relapse into violent conflict. To this end, the PBC can bring the various concerns of the countries in question and ensure that national priorities are factored in the Council's mandate design and implementation. It is imperative that the PBC's advice is context-specific and tailored to be relevant at different stages of the Council's consideration of/engagement with conflict or post-conflict situations.

Furthermore, by improving its working methods, the PBC can strengthen its advisory role to the SC and help further improve the relationship between Council and Commission.

Through its convening role of a wide array of critical regional and international actors, the PBC can help bring a peacebuilding perspective to the Council's decision-making, with a view to ensuring early and sustained attention on/investment in: i) inclusive political dialogue; ii) national capacity and institution-building, and iii) the socioeconomic dimension of peace. By bringing together security and development actors, the PBC can furthermore help bridge the divide and break the silos between UN principal organs and actors in order to address fragmentation and duplication of efforts.

In support of the draw-down phase of peace operations, PBC's partnerships with regional organizations, international and regional financial institutions will help sustain attention and commitment from the international community to national peacebuilding priorities focusing on addressing drivers of conflict and building resilient institutions.

The PBC can also support ongoing operations tasked with specific peacebuilding related mandates by performing time-limited tasks in support of specific milestones, e.g. elections, donor roundtables...etc.

Efforts aimed at building peace do not have to follow armed conflict. The PBC can and should become engaged wherever national actors believe they could benefit from international accompaniment during difficult periods of political transitions.
