to the procedural character of future proposals which might be deemed to fall under them.

As noted in preceding volumes of the Repertoire,

Part I, section B, includes only two instances where the rejection of a proposal, having obtained seven or more votes with one or more permanent members casting a negative vote, indicated the non-procedural character of the decision. During the period under review, there has been no discussion in the Security Council of the procedural or non-procedural character

¹ By resolution 1991 A (XVIII) of 17 December 1963, the General Assembly adopted amendments to Articles 23 and 27 of the Charter which enlarged the membership of the Security Council from eleven to fifteen, and changed the required majority for its decision from seven to nine. These amendments entered into force on 31 August, 1965 (see Annual Report of the Secretary-General on the Work of the parts of this Supplement.

"3. Decisions of the Security Council on all other matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members including the concurring votes of the permanent members; provided that, in decisions under Chapter VI, and under paragraph 3 of Article 52, a party to a dispute shall abstain from voting".

Part III, section B, lists those occasions (Cases 7-21) on which permanent members have abstained voluntarily considering that no affirmative decision could have been taken had they voted against the proposal.
